The Sound of Trumpets by John Mortimer â€“ review. Titmuss is a satirical creation of the wickedest and most intriguing kind, possessing the brains of a reptilian mastermind, and is able to turn every disaster into a public relations triumph. Flitton jumps at the chance â€“ the messianic Labourite using Thatcherite tricks, just as quick to compromise his ideals as anyone else.

Sir John Mortimer is perhaps best know for creating one of literature's most irascible yet loveable characters in Horace Rumpole. The Thames television adaptation of the novels - Rumpole of the Bailey - proved hugely successful in the 1980's. But as I have been discovering ever since, Rumpole is just the tip of a very huge iceberg.
